POINT LOOKOUT.

HIGH up on Toulou mountain in Washington state is Point Lookout. This mountain is only nine miles in an air line from the Canadian border. At Point Lookout there is a short, comparatively flat stretch of trail. Here the climber is beyond reach of the mosquitoes which swarm in the woods at lower levels; here his horse eagerly welcomes a loosened rein and huddles among the thick brush grass, before proceeding up the short remaining distance to the near-by mining camp.

Many people of the region call it Lazy Lookout, for not a few travelers on a hot summer afternoon have been lulled to sleep by the cool breezes which descend from the top of the mountain. The trail is a short, comparatively flat stretch of trail. Here the climber is beyond reach of the mosquitoes which swarm in the woods at lower levels; here his horse eagerly welcomes a loosened rein and huddles among the thick brush grass, before proceeding up the short remaining distance to the near-by mining camp.

Along the wide, yellow ribbon of road which outlines the base of Mt. Toulou runs the wide, smooth green current of the Kettle river, one of the many tributaries of the mighty Columbia. Among the river are several of the larger bridges and the little towns of northern Washington. The train shows that it fully appreciates its position in this pioneer country. It hurries most importantly along the towering pines along its track, and shortly announces its approach with a shrill whistle, which echoes and re-echoes among the hills for many minutes before the train appears.

After the train has passed, the weather at Pt. Lookout settles himself into more among the pine needles and rocks, to make another stop before he finishes his trip to the camp in time for dinner.

RESTRICTIONS in making certain cuts of shoes, owing to the war industries, comes to us as a great blessing. This, and the tendency now to follow anything military in cut, has brought about a sensible style of shoe, beside giving us a becoming and a decidedly comfortable foot covering. This shoe is stockily made, if for walking, and in all cases, except the dancing slipper, has low heels, just broad enough to give a solid base for support, and close following the shape of the natural foot in their round curves over the front. It will readily be seen what an opportunity the foot has for wear free circulation of blood, and so unnatural pressure on any part of bones. Hereafter women especially, were the victims of trade competition in unlimited styles and cuts of shoes. The day had passed when the general purchaser had a made to order pair of shoes, from a last following the lines of the foot. One bought shoes regardless of the price, and the foot even the foot was hurt, or the bones of the spine thrown out of position. As for the possibility of getting comfortable shoes, there were many styles in choice from, and in most cases so artificial when it came to following the lines of the foot, even the foot was hurt, or the bones of the spine thrown out of position. Interests. "Aunt Agnes is a Japanese used sold at most drug stores and if your druggist does not have it, he can easily procure it for you. It is sold by the ounce, usually at 25 cents. One tablespoonful a day is all that is needed to keep the system clear. It is tasteless, so it can be scattered into the cereal at breakfast or mixed into the soup at dinner. It can be eaten by itself, but it is more easily taken in connection with food."

Dandruff is the result of neglect to the scalp. It can easily be overcome by keeping the scalp massaged, and by regular applications of a good hair tonic.

UNCLE WIGGILY AND THE SPINNING WHEEL.

By HOWARD GARIS.

NURSE JANE FUZZY WUZZEY, the muskrat lady housekeeper, who kept the hollow stump bungalow for Uncle Wiggily Longears, the bunny rabbit gentleman, looked out of the window one day and saw the white snowflakes coming down.

"Oh, Uncle Wiggily!" cried Nurse Jane. "There is going to be a big storm. Surely you will not go out today to have an adventure?"

Uncle Wiggily pressed the tip of his pink, twinkling nose against the window glass and said:

"No, I guess I'll not go out. I'll stay home and have an adventure right here that is if I can. I wonder what sort of adventure it will be! Let's have a game of tag, Nurse Jane. I'll chase you around the table and—"

"Oh, I haven't time for that!" laughed the muskrat lady. "I must wash the breakfast dishes. You go up in the attic and have an adventure there."

"I will!" said Uncle Wiggily. "The other day I cleaned the cellar and I had a nice adventure. Now I'll go and clean up the attic, and maybe something else will happen."

And it did. I'll tell you all about it. The attic of the hollow stump bungalow where Uncle Wiggily lived was not very large, but there were a number of curious things in it. For Mr. Longears and Nurse Jane were quite old fashioned. There were strings of sleigh bells, old trunks in which Uncle Wiggily kept his worsted, tall silk hats and Nurse Jane her used-to-be Sunday-go-to-meeting dresses.

"My, there are lots of things here that may make an adventure for me," said Uncle Wiggily, as he looked about. And then he saw a big wheel, that was slowly whirling around, as the wintry wind blew in through the cracks of the attic.

"Hal! There's a bicycle or a velocipede, and I can have a ride!" thought the bunny uncle. "That will be fun and maybe an adventure too, when I can get out and have one. I'll ride the velocipede in the attic; that's what I'll do!"

But, as he went closer, he saw that it was a spinning wheel, instead of a bicycle. Yes, it was a great big spinning wheel—the kind the Pilgrim mothers had used with which to spin yarn to knit socks for the Pilgrim fathers.

"Oh, my!" cried Uncle Wiggily. "That spinning wheel is real jolly! I'll make it go as fast as a merry-go-round and have some fun."

As he came nearer he heard a little squeaking noise.

The spinning wheel was rusty and squeaked when it was turned. "Oh, my!" cried Uncle Wiggily. "It's so rusty, it won't turn. I'll have to oil it. I'll get some oil from the kitchen."

"Oh, my!" cried Uncle Wiggily. "It's so rusty, it won't turn. I'll have to oil it. I'll get some oil from the kitchen."
